The high license idea is rapidly gaining ground in Illinois, as shown by the recent local elections in that state.

United States Senator Anthony, of Rhode Island, is lying very sick at Providence. His friends were hopeful at the latest accounts.

A Miss Potter, who studied at Cornell university, was recently graduated from a medical school in Buffalo, standing at the head of a large class.

Mr. Edmunds thinks that a man whom the insurance companies will not insure on account of age and feebleness, should not be nominated for president by the democrats. On this ground he thinks Mr. Tilden will not be nominated.

The Cincinnati Enquirer, democratic, says: "After-dinner speeches made by statesmen who hang to the back of their chairs for support, neither create public opinion nor make votes." This is likely the reason why democratic statesmen can't win public confidence, nor the party make votes.

The Sunday Inter Ocean made its appearance in Janesville on Sunday afternoon. It contained twenty pages, and in all respects was a model Sunday newspaper. The news was the latest, the miscellany fresh, and the stories bright and interesting. We hope this important edition of that excellent paper will grow into great success.

The Chicago Journal was thirty-nine years old on Saturday. It was the first daily ever published in Chicago. It has seen marvelous changes in its life-time, and has weathered many a storm, and today it enjoys the reputation of not only being an influential, and stanch republican journal, but the best evening news. paper published in the west.

A Madison dispatch to the Milwaukee Sunday Telegraph, says: "Reports from the east say that Sam Cox claims votes from Wisconsin for the speakership. It is said that Woodward, Rankin and Winans will be likely to support Cox. Dunster will support Randall. Politicians here believe that Randall will be elected, and if the prospects that way are very good he will get Rankin's support and probably Winans'."

It is reported that a company of colored people left North Carolina two years ago for Liberia. Most of them have just returned. They tell woful tales of their ancestral home. Africa, it would seem, is a poor place for Africans. According to the testimony of the returned wanderers, the feet of the American-born negroes are subject to sore diseases from the poisonous bite of an insect peculiar to "Africa's golden sands."

The State Journal, in giving an account of the sale of the Park hotel, says the consideration, it is understood, was between $60,000 and $70,000, though absolute figures cannot be ascertained. The hotel was sold to the Vilas house estate. It is rumored that at a later period the ground floor of the Vilas house is to be thoroughly overhauled, the necessary partitions removed and the place converted into stores. The upper stories are to remain intact and will constitute a dormitory which will be managed in connection with the Park hotel. It is probable that Mr. Jake VanEtta, the present popular landlord of the Vilas house, will ultimately assume the management of both houses. The change in the ownership of the Park gives assurance that this hotel will be well kept, and retain its reputation for general excellence.

The republicans of the Illinois legislature have put an end to their trouble by abandoning their effort to seat Judge Bradwell. Their success depended on one vote—the vote of a man named Rook. His size is thus given by the Chicago Journal:

The fellow Rook stands forth, in his ineffable littleness, as the most contemptible specimen of shameless and perfidious manhood in the state of Illinois. He has, by his own act, branded himself as a sneak and a traitor. If his treachery will have the effect of making the republicans of Cook county more circumspect in selecting their legislative candidates in the future, this humiliating experience will not be entirely without value to the party or the public.

This weak creature Rook was not a free moral agent, and the party that furnished him the most whisky had him, and of course he fell into the hands of the democrats. By keeping him brim full they made a democrat of him, but when sober he was more than half inclined to be a republican. But democratic whisky won and Rook desposed of himself for what he could drink. This is another instance showing how great a power whisky is in the democratic party.

Mr. I. T. Carr of the Jefferson county Banner, and who was elected chief clerk of the democratic assembly and was not able to perform the duties of the office, makes a savage attack on the republican papers that charged him with incapacity. The paper which he edits, says he was an able clerk, but it does not explain why the democrats who elected him chief clerk were forced to hire a republican to act as clerk in place of Mr Carr. He should explain this. But enough of this. Mr. Carr next turns himself into a constitutional lawyer, and says that the senate violated the constitution by adjourning over three days without the consent of the other house. Therefore, he argues, the senate, having so adjourned, dissolved itself. It could not reconvene. And when it came together on the fifth day after its adjournment, it sat for the rest of the session as an illegal body. All the laws and acts which it participated in after that flagrant breach of the constitution, are null and void. We don't know whether Mr. Carr ever read the constitution, probably he never did, but if he is right in his conclusion, the state appropriations are void, the state tax a nulity, and the late laws of no force whatever.

FOR EIGHTY-FOUR.

The New York Sun Brings Forward the Name of S. J. Tilden.

Presidential Gossip---Hendricks Not Available---Harrison Declines to Talk.

NEW YORK, April 23.—The Sun in a leading editorial says: At the present state of the discussion as to who shall be the next Democratic candidate for the presidency, the name of Samuel J. Tilden has arisen into greater prominence than any other. The representatives of several newspapers have lately visited Mr. Tilden at his home at Greystone, and their report upon the condition of the retired statesman's physical vigor is such that he is once more mentioned as a candidate for 1884, and the possibility of his leading the Democrats to victory is again discussed by the press, both Republican and Democratic.

The sentiment among the Republicans, as expressed through the journals of that party and through several of their political leaders, is that if Mr. Tilden should emerge from his retirement and appear again at the head of the Democratic ranks, the idea of their electing their ticket in 1884 would practically disappear. If the Democrats should offer to put in office a man of such vast experience and of such known wisdom as Mr. Tilden, the great majorities that swept away the Republicans last fall would be held by the Democrats in the approaching campaign, and the long career of Republican corruption and extravagance would be finally brought to a close.

On the other hand, what an end to all petty disagreements and useless bickerings would Mr. Tilden's nomination bring to the Democrats! To have once more at their head a leader who knows and honors the principles of Democracy, of a wisdom and knowledge of public affairs far superior to men of his time, and of an intellectual power that could engraft the fruits of his political studies upon the perverted system of our government and make it such a Democracy as was outlined by Thomas Jefferson! Theorists of every kind in the Democratic party, protectionists, free traders, men who believe in hard money or in soft money, would all follow Mr. Tilden's guidance, because there would be no doubt of his ability to deal with the mighty task of reforming the government, and because of their confidence in the wisdom of his judgment when applied to all questions of a national interest.

And yet how does this candidate, who would fill the Democrats with enthusiasm and the Republicans with anxiety, correspond with the sort suggested by various members of the Democratic party? If Mr. Tilden is not to lead his party in the approaching contest, what must be the principles of the standard bearer who shall be chosen? Shall he appear as a representative mainly of the pure and equitable doctrine of free trade, a theory which the immense indebtedness of this country must, for many years to come, render impracticable? Or shall he be a man capable of grappling with the vital needs of the country and ready to lead the enormous army of voters who drove out the majority of the last congress because of their riotous extravagance and indifference to the necessity of reducing the burdens of our taxes?

This is a question for genuine Democrats to think over.

THE OHIO IDEA.

Gen. Rice, one of the prominent leaders of the Ohio Democracy, at the Fifth Avenue hotel, said: "Politics in Ohio are at a standstill just now. The Republican convention meets in the early part of June, and the Democrats will hold their convention a few weeks later. There is not much talk at present in regard to candidates, but things will be lively in a few weeks.

"How is the newly-inaugurated Tilden boom regarded by the Democracy of Ohio?"

"Mr. Tilden has not thus far been regarded as among the probabilities. There is a feeling the time for his nomination was in 1880, when the electoral fraud might have been made the question. But at present Mr. Tilden has not been thought of as a candidate at all."

"Do you regard him as the strongest man that could be nominated?"

"I am not prepared to say just now, for as I say he has not been regarded as among the probabilities. I will say this, however; I do not regard Mr. Tilden as head and shoulders above many other prominent statesmen in the country."

WHAT HARRISON SAYS.

Senator Ben Harrison, of Indiana, who is regarded in certain quarters as an aspirant for the presidential nomination, said to a reporter this morning: "Why I am looked upon as a candidate I cannot even imagine. Up to the present time nothing that I ever said or did can possibly be construed as tending in that direction."

Mr. Harrison refused to talk on the possibilities of either of the prominent candidates succeeding in obtaining the nomination. When asked who would probably be the leader of the Republican minority in the next house, he said that there were a number of very able men who were competent to take the leadership, but he refused to name any particular person as his favorite. "Mr. Reed is a strong man," he said, "so is Mr. Robinson."

"And Mr. Keifer suggested the reporter.

"Yes, he would make a good leader, but I am not sufficiently well acquainted with him to hazard an opinion as to his chances."

CALKINS ON HENDRICKS.

WASHINGTON, April 23.—Ex-Sergeant-at-arms Thompson, of Ohio, who has arrived from Ohio, was met by a reporter. He reports that the prospects for Democratic success this fall are very encouraging. He has no idea who will be either the Republican or Democratic nominees for governor. While drifting on presidential talk, Representative Calkins, of Indiana, came by. It was suggested by one of the group that it began to look as if the Democratic ticket would probably be Tilden and Hendricks.

"No, it won't," said Calkins. "Hendricks will be dead by the time the convention meets."

"What do you mean?" said the reporter.

"I mean," said he, "that Hendricks is in a very bad physical condition. He has what is called senile gangrene. It appeared at the end of his big toe on the right foot, which was treated as a boil by a physician in Indianapolis. He is now compelled to walk on his heel. The only way he can be saved is to cut his leg off, and Hendricks will die before he will submit to such an operation."

A Dog's Legacy.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., April 23.—A petition has been filed in the Orphans' Court by Mary Tierny, housekeeper for the late Rev. Richard O'Connor, who left her a legacy of $10 a week for the maintenance of his faithful dog. The petitioner, who was designated to take charge of the canine, declares that the executor refuses to make the weekly payments, and asks that he be ordered to pay from Feb. 1.

The Iowa Prohibitory Amendment.

DUBUQUE, Iowa, April 23.—The report is current that the supreme court will render a decision in the amendment case this afternoon, sustaining its former opinions as to its unconstitutionality. The court and the public are anxious to have this vexed question settled one way or the other.

Disordered bowels always attend teething children. Brown's Teething Cordial corrects this.

The Michigan Mine Disaster.

IRON MOUNTAIN, Mich., April 23.—Work at Keelridge mine has been abandoned, as it is impossible to take the bodies out, the earth caving in faster than the men can take it out, and the cavity being of such a nature that it cannot be timbered. The danger is so great that men refuse to work.

Liquor Legislation in Michigan.

LANSING, Mich., April 23.—The muddle in the legislature caused by the passage of the local option bill for villages still remains and promises to make trouble for somebody yet. It seems that the governor had duly notified the house of his approval, and when he sent the bill back to the house he declined to erase his signature. The journal of the senate will show the approval of the bill, and the senate claims that it is a law. The act is now in the house, and the question now is how to get it on file in the office of the secretary of state. The Prohibitionists are jubilant and claim a great victory.

MUSCULAR FREDERICK.

Gebhardt and a Baltimore Reporter Almost Come to Blows.

BALTIMORE, Md., April 23.—Freddie Gebhardt, whose assidious attentions to the Jersey Lily have been so widely commented on, threatened to repeat his St Louis experience Friday evening by attacking Mr. John Shriver, a reporter of The Baltimore American. Mr. Shriver wrote up and published in Friday's issue an account of Freddie's movements at the Academy of Music, where Mrs. Langtry was appearing, from the time he entered the theatre till he left. He also published an account of what purported to be an interview between Mrs. Langtry and himself in the former's dressing-room. Last evening Freddie approached Mr. Shriver in the lobby in an abrupt manner, and demanded to know by what authority he had presumed to write up the interview. Mr. Shriver finally admitted that his card which he had sent to Mrs. Langtry had been returned, but that she had been interviewed by an American reporter while on the train coming from Washington. Mr. Gebhardt characterized the whole matter of the interview as a lie and remarked that he could whip a liar, and threatened, unless a retraction was made, he would treat Mr. Shriver as he had treated Mr. Cunningham at St. Louis. He further threatened to publish a card over Mrs. Langtry's signature, denying the truth of the reported interview. The American this morning admits that there was no interview with a reporter of that paper Thursday night, and whether that will satisfy Mr. Gebhardt or not remains to be seen.

Another difficulty took place at the Academy of Music Saturday night between Gebhardt and Shriver. Shriver was talking with several gentlemen, when Gebhardt and Mendum, treasurer of the Langtry company, made their appearance. Gebhardt renewed his abuse of Shriver, who paid no attention to him. His language attracted the attention of Marshal Frey and Detective Pontier, who were standing near. The marshal reprimanded Gebhardt and ordered him away. The latter demanded to know who the officer was, and upon hearing the remark, "I am the marshal of police," Freddie wilted and walked past Shriver, and remarked, "You are no gentleman, and far beneath me." Shriver made a rush for Freddie, and was immediately grabbed by Detective Pontier. Marshal Frey then spoke to Freddie and further trouble was prevented. As Gebhardt walked away he remarked: "I have been a friend of reporters, but with the exception of one or two they are scallawags."

Rumors are afloat in New York that the New York and New England Railroad company is in a bad way financially, and that foreclosure is among the probabilities. The storm of Saturday was very severe in Iowa, Nebraska and Wyoming. At Danbury, Iowa, a stock of lumber was blown away, causing a loss of $10,000. In Colorado a passenger train on the South Park railway was blown from the track and several injured, none seriously. The wind assumed the character of a cyclone at some points.

Mr. W. L. Church, comptroller of the village of Hyde Park, a suburb of Chicago, is alleged to be a defaulter in the sum of $8,000. He was a candidate for re-election on the 3d inst., but was defeated. The failure of Mr. Church to appear at his office Saturday morning prompted an investigation of his accounts, which disclosed it as alleged, a shortage of the amount named. Mr. Church has not been seen in Hyde Park since early Saturday morning.

A Remarkable Case.

LOCKPORT, N. Y., April 23.—The case of the birth of a child occurring in this (Niagara) county recently, which has just become public, is said by the physicians who attended the woman to be entirely unparalleled in the history of medical practice. Over a year ago a lady named Harrington, residing at Ransomville, received a severe stroke of paralysis, rendering her entire body, except the head and one arm, completely helpless. To the surprise of her neighbors she lived along, however, and the astonishing climax occurred a few days ago, when she gave birth to a healthy child while alone, and, being paralyzed, did not know it, being unable to feel pain. She was found later with the child born, and the physicians were summoned. The afflicted lady lived for several days, but finally expired, it is said, from lack of proper attention at the start. The child is alive and healthy yet. The case has excited great interest among local physicians, as the facts are well authenticated.

The City of Keokuk, of the St. Louis and St. Paul Packet company, arrived Saturday morning, and both boats left for the south before noon. Considerable difficulty was experienced from ice in Lake Pepin, but the time of the Mary on her trip up was a trifle over nine miles an hour. The river is twelve foot above high-water mark, and rising.

Is Fun Better than Physic?

Fun is excellent; a hearty laugh is known the whole world over to be a health promoter; but fun does not fill the bill when a man needs physic, on the other hand people take too much physic. They would be more healthy, live longer and enjoy life thoroughly if they used Dr. Jones' Red Clover Tonic, which cures all blood disorders, indigestion, kidney and liver troubles, removes pimples, and is a perfect tonic. MORE TO COME.

London Correspondents Promise More Dynamite Sensations.

What Jennings and Smalley Say--British Satisfaction Over American Opinion.

The Standard's View---The Irish World on the Philadelphia Convention--A Talk With Miss Byrne.

NEW YORK April 23.—The World's cable letter says: The copious quotations from the editorial columns of the leading New York newspapers, which are cabled here every day, are read with great interest. Their general tone is everywhere considered fair and generous, and the British public has been strengthened in its belief that the "dynamitors" in the United States may be left to the sense of justice of the American people. Sensational as have been the recent revelations I understand that revelations of an even more sensational character are in store, and that the authorities anticipate confidently that disclosures will be made, which will justify them in preparing a formal request for the extradition of O'Donovan Rossa. This much may be stated with perfect safety. All the leaders of the conspiracy on both sides of the Atlantic are known to the police here. One effect of the arrests and the belief that the authorities are in possession of all the clews hey need is shown in the complete restoration of public confidence. All the apprehension that made the metropolis last week a very bedlam seems to have died out.

George W. Smalley telegraphs to The Tribune as follows: There is general and hearty recognition on the part of the English press of the fact that the tone of the best portion of the American press respecting the dynamite conspiracy leaves nothing to be desired. Journals so opposed as The Standard and The Daily News, The Spectator and The Globe, and many others, agree in acknowledging that American public opinion is convinced of the impolicy and the immorality of allowing Irish plots to be prepared in America. The share of the press in forming and expressing the convictions of the American people is made evident here by copious dispatches from New York and Philadelphia, and is fully recognized. The Standard says that, although some New York journals show no great friendliness to this country yet the more responsible organs like The Tribune, say that the fact must be faced whether the United States authorities can shirk the obligation to suppress the dynamite associations. The Globe observes that it is full time for the Washington cabinet to consider whether this change from menacing talk to deadly acts does not make necessary a corresponding change in American law. "The New York Tribune," it adds, "opportunely puts this question of questions to the American government, and in so doing our contemporary accurately catches the import of what is now a common subject of conversation in English society."

Lynch's testimony supplies the first clear account of the actual progress and condition of the dynamite conspiracies in America, and in other respects confirms the testimony already in the possession of the police. It enabled Mr. Poland, the treasury counsel, to announce that the charge against the prisoners was under the act involving penal servitude for life. The failure of the Dublin jury to convict Kelly was no surprise to the crown counsel, as one juryman was suspected of being pledged in advance to acquit the assassin. A conviction next week is confidently expected, the testimony being as conclusive against Kelly as it was against Brady and Curley. The confession of the latter of his membership in the Invincibles silences even Irish criticism.

THE STANDARD ON DYNAMITE.

LONDON, April 23.—The Standard has an editorial on the dynamite disclosures, of which the following is an extract: "The striking disclosures in Bow street in reference to the dynamite conspiracy, whatever their ultimate value may be against the prisoners, leave little doubt in the minds of the public on both sides of the Atlantic of the murderous design originated in New York, and that the shield of American freedom is being prostituted to cover the arm of the assassin. It is, indeed, remarkable that the story of the plot, as far as it is yet before us, does not present any of the conspirators, whether principals or tools, as either English or Irish by domicile or even, it would seem, by nationality. Such evidence as already given indicates that not only was the conspiracy hatched in New York, but that it was found necessary or desirable by the conspirators to import from America at considerable expense all the men who were to take an active part in its execution. The men who made up their minds to bring about the freedom of Ireland by the sacrifice of the innocent lives of all nationalities in the heart of London can have known little or nothing but what they were told of the supposed tyranny of the Saxon and assumed wrongs of the Celt. The equal laws and the justice which remains calm and impartial even in such days as these, the generous hand in times of distress which England has ever extended to her weaker sister, are never heard of by the New York artisan who glories in his Irish descent. The passion of traditional animosity and prejudice is carefully planted and nurtured by interested hands. The fear of the consequences of refusal, and sometimes apparently the greed of pecuniary reward, seem to be the motives which enlist such men in an enterprise for the wholesale destruction of innocent lives and the specious pretext of spurious patriotism. But the responsibility, moral as well as legal, which rests upon the country in which such miscreants make their lair is, we believe, already felt and appreciated by the vast majority of the American public. Great Britain might, we think, well ask the United States to extend their extradition law so as to include dynamite bravos; but in truth extradition is not what is more especially needed in the present state of affairs. The real point is to bring within the reach of American punishment those who conspire in New York to commit those outrages. There is no doubt they can be brought within the English law of treason-felony, if any overt act is committed in England by any of the conspirators. But it is American law which can most effectively punish or defer those who at present openly concoct those schemes in the cities of the United States. Is it an offence against American law to conspire in America to commit murder in England? If not, it ought to be made so. The common law of the United States was almost wholly borrowed from our own, and we have the highest authority for saying that such conspiracy in England is a criminal offence by common law. To conspire in England as Rossa boasts he is doing in New York would be an offense against English law. If the American code is weaker in this respect than ours, surely the good sense of the American people will insist upon having it altered. The importance of such deterrent force is well shown by the fact that in the possession of one of the prisoners now charged at Bow street was found a book with a marker inserted at the page containing information as to the law of the United States on this very subject. If the dynamite conspirators knew that the American courts could and would punish their machinations, and if the law of extradition were amended in the spirit indicated by our own commission on the subject in 1870, the wretches who have hitherto publicly and insolently boasted of their murderous designs would soon be compelled to abandon or at least to conceal them."

THE IRISH WORLD ON THE PHILADELPHIA CONVENTION.

NEW YORK, April 23.—The following extract from an editorial in the current issue of The Irish World represents the spirit in which its constituency will act.

"If the convention in Philadelphia only asks for Ireland what Mr. Parnell asks in the house of commons, then, indeed, the results will be small. If, however, the convention demands the full and complete measures of Ireland's independence, with an alternative of another no-rent manifesto and tons of dynamite, it will be that one demand go to the precise length that Mr. Parnell would wish, and by the alternative reserve to itself the right of going as far as was necessary in the event of a refusal. Even moderate men appear to think that in the alternative lies the only hope of Ireland's future. It is now evident to the world that through the medium of that alternative impressions can be made which logic and eloquence fail to convey to the English mind. If there is no necessity for it all will rejoice; but if there is, men must go to work with ungloved hands. It is better to cut off the cancer than to be cut off by it."

This does not indicate very forcibly that Mr. Egan's or Mr. Mooney's moderate views an indorsement of Mr. Parnell or his policy will be enthusiastically indorsed by the convention.

Miss Jennie Byrne, who was charged by Carey with giving aid to the Invincibles has been interviewed and said:

"They say I carried firearms to the Invincibles, do they? Where did I carry them? The custom house officials kept me shivering until they examined every trunk I had, and even my hand-bags were looked through. They seemed awfully afraid that I was charged with dynamite. I never saw Carey or any of the men who are now on trial in the Phœnix park murders. I am not in favor of dynamite. I am a Parnell Land Leaguer. I went to Ireland to help Miss Parnell to distribute a fund for the benefit of the evicted tenants and suspects."

"Were you not in sympathy with your brother regarding Irish freedom, and is he not an advocate of dynamite?"

"He does not advocate dynamite any more than Mr. Egan does. He is not in favor, neither does he oppose it. You may say for me that I did not offer any aid to the Invincibles in any manner whatever, and that the story is entirely false."

Other Foreign News.

NEW YORK. April 23.—Special cables say: In the absence of any domestic needs worth commenting upon, The Standard, Spectator and other London papers, both daily and weekly, devote a very considerable amount of their space to comments upon Mr. Jay Gould's retirement from active business life with his round $400,000,000. The writers of the articles make a variety of speculations as to what use Mr. Gould may make of his fortune. Their comments, I may say, are not ill-natured, but are genuine expressions of wonder and envy. The preparatory notices to which I have just alluded are kindling curiosity everywhere, and when he appears he will have all London at his feet; in fact, as I said once before in these dispatches, if Gould wants it he can have the freedom of the city in the customary "gold box of the value of one hundred guineas." His great business success assures his popularity.

STANLEY AND DE BRAZZA.

There is a strong feeling in support of Stanley in England, and the vigorous and aggressive policy of the French in southwestern Africa is regarded with great hostility. It is evident that a serious conflict is imminent between De Brazza and Stanley, and it is probable that the latter will be reinforced at once. British interests on the coast are important and increasing, and Stanley has such a large commercial following that his progress is watched with great anxiety. An English man-of-war will probably be ordered to the Congo in a few days.

THE QUEEN.

The reassuring statements about the queen's health, like the first contradiction of the reports of a serious accident, do not correspond with private medical accounts. The queen herself, though suffering much, strove to make light of the affair, refusing to see a surgeon till Sir William Jenner positively declined further responsibility. Sir James Paget, who was then summoned, forbade the journey to Balmoral, but allowed the journey to Osborne, on condition of the queen's observing the greatest precaution. He declared that the injured ankle would require certainly weeks, probably months, for a complete restoration. People about the queen say that thus far she bears the enforced inactivity well, but they dread the effects of the prolonged deprivation of exercise, which she has always been accustomed to take.

ST. PETERSBURG, April 23.—The emperor and empress will reach Moscow the 21st of May. The coronation takes place the 27th. The festivities include eight grand balls, and will be prolonged until the 8th of June. The state entry into St. Petersburg will be made the 10th of that month.

FOREIGN NOTES.

CINCINNATI, Ohio, April 23.—The Cincinnati News company, Gov. J. C. Underwood, manager, has accepted the terms of the Morning Journal company for the transfer of the franchise of that paper in the Western Associated Press, with a lease of the building now used by The Morning Journal, formerly belonging to the Cincinnati Gazette company. The Daily News will probably be issued from its new location May 1. It is Democratic in politics.

WASHINGTON.

Arrival of the President---Rumors of His Illness Exaggerated.---Cheap Postage.---Fred Douglass' Wealth.--The Garfield Memorial.

WASHINGTON, April 23.—The president reached here in his special car attached to the regular southern express at 9:30 o'clock Saturday night. As it was not generally known at what hour he would arrive, and the weather was extremely bad, there was no large crowd waiting for him, but a couple of hundred formed a double line through the depot in order to inspect him carefully as he passed to his carriage. Only two personal and official friends were at the depot. Allen Arthur went in his father's carriage, and Attorney General Brewster drove down to give an official tone to the reception. Private Secretary Phillips said that the president's illness was of no consequence whatever; that the special dispatches were grossly exaggerated, and that to-day the president was as well as ever. The president shows a good deal of temper about the stories of his attack, and, as he passed into the White House from his carriage last night and was congratulated on his recovery, he made some curt remarks about the habit of special correspondents of lying when they had nothing else to do.

CHEAP POSTAGE AND NO DEFICIT.

Mr. Hazen, third assistant postmaster general, who has charge of the finances of the department, desires to have his prediction go on record that the deficit on account of the reduction of letter postage to 2 cents will not exceed $3,000,000.

FRED DOUGLASS' WEALTH.

Mr. Fred Douglass was asked by a reporter about a paragraph which has gone around the newspapers representing him to be a man of considerable wealth. "That is something I never talk about," said Mr. Douglass, laughing. "It is said that John Jacob Astor, when asked how much it took to make a man rich, answered, 'A little more.' That answer will do for me, too, I suppose. Before I came here I had some property, but I have lost a great deal. I lost $10,000 here in a newspaper. I have seen statements that the offices I have held paid a great deal, that the marshal's office for instance, was worth $10,000 or $12,000 a year. The fact is, it was not worth near so much. The law allowed only $6,000, and there was nothing else to get except by stealing, and I have not been here long enough for that. Yes, I have seen statements that I am worth $100,000 or $150,000, but they all place the figures too high."

THE GARFIELD MEMORIAL.

The managers of the Garfield memorial hospital have purchased the property of Mr. Lewis H. Schneider on the highland, north of the city, at the head of Tenth street. For this property, which includes a spacious residence and extensive grounds, $37,500 will be paid. The managers of the hospital will take possession on the first of August. It is proposed to reconstruct the building for temporary use for hospital purposes. The property of the union soldiers' and sailors' orphan asylum, appropriated to the hospital, will be sold and the proceeds devoted to the erection of a new hospital building under the direction of Dr. John S. Billings, U. S. A.

AN UNHAPPY DIFFERENCE.

Protestant vs. Catholic---A Dying Man's Wife and Daughter Arrested.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., April 23.—Great excitement was caused here over a contest between Catholics and Protestants around the deathbed of a citizen, culminating in the arrest of the dying man's wife and daughter on affidavit of a Catholic priest named Deregge. The priest's story is that he was sent to administer the last sacrament to Edward Coffee, and that when he appeared at the house to do so Mrs. Coffee denied him admittance, and with her daughter nearly slammed the door in his face. He sought legal counsel, upon whose advice Mrs. Coffee and her daughter were arrested on the charge of violating section 373 of the penal code, which provides a penalty for preventing the performance of a religious act.

The wife and daughter claim that Coffee, although baptized when a child in the Catholic church, has never pretended to be a Catholic since he married a Protestant woman over twenty years ago; that he had expressed a wish for Protestant spiritual advice. In the police court the prisoners asked for an adjournment until Monday. The priest's attorney objected. The police judge finally adjourned the case as requested, and advised the two attorneys, the attending physician, and the priest to meet at the house, and that the physician ascertain privately whether Coffee was rational, and if so, what species of spiritual comfort he desired. The meeting was held as desired, a leading physician being called in to help the attending physician make the examination. They examined Coffee carefully, found him rational, and reported that he said he preferred a Protestant clergyman to a Catholic priest. The attorney for the priest says he will drop the prosecution of the women after reading the report of the physicians.

The Wilson Scandal.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., April 23.—A gentleman intimately associated with T. W. Wilson, whose unfortunate domestic difficulties have recently been aired in the journals of this city and Chicago, states most emphatically that Mr. Wilson never paid Frazier any money in any shape whatever, and further, that all the blame for the affair should not be thrown upon Mr. Wilson. The friend alleges that the troubles antedate the appearance of Mrs. Frazer in Minneapolis, and are due to other causes. He also claims that Mrs. Wilson never drew a revolver on her husband, and that he never offered her $25,000 and she never demanded $50,000. Mrs. Wilson has been obliged to forsake her former luxurious home on Hennepin avenue, and is now living modestly in upper apartments at Eleventh street north. In response to the reporter's inquiries Mrs. Wilson said: "I am very sorry it got into the papers. We endeavored to go through all as quietly as possible." The report that Mr. Wilson had offered her $25,000 in compromise had no foundation whatever. He had, however, at one time proffered her $7,000 as an inducement to agree to a divorce. Mrs. Wilson absolutely declined to go into any further details in the unfortunate matter, saying that it was worse than useless to talk of it publicly.

Gougar vs. Mandler.

LAFAYETTE, Ind., April 23.—Agreeably to arrangement between the court and the attorneys in the Gougar-Mandler case, a motion for a new trial, filed by attorneys was argued Saturday. The motion was supported by ninety-six reasons classified as follows: Eighty-nine errors in the court in admitting certain testimony and ruling out certain other; two, misconduct of plaintiff before the jury; one misconduct of Capt. Wallace in making certain statements in hearing of the jury; one, misconduct of R. P. Davidson, plaintiff's attorney, in presence of the jury; that the verdict was contrary to the evidence; that it was contrary to law; and that the damages were excessive. After the argument on both sides, the court took the matter under advisement.

Milwaukee's Female Lawyer.

MILWAUKEE, April 23.—At a late hour Saturday night Kate Kane, the female attorney who was ordered to prison Friday because she threw a glass of water in Judge Mallory's face in open court, was released on a writ of habeas corpus. She was taken from jail on the writ and the case was heard before Court Commissioner Ryan, the hearing lasting till nearly midnight. Counsel for Miss Kane, while not denying or seeking to extenuate her offense, held that the commitment was illegal, as it took place before the papers were drawn.

Miss Kane, in an interview says that Judge Mallory has repeatedly insulted her in open court, and she had simply retaliated in doing what she had done.

O'Brien's Circus Attacked at Dover, Delaware, by a Mob.

Fourteen Men Wounded, One Fatally---Full Account of the Affair.

DOVER, Del., April 23.—A mob attacked John O'Brien's circus in this place Saturday night, and during the battle 14 men were shot. Charles Henderson, a showman, was shot through the breast and cannot recover, and other men attached to the circus are suffering from gun-shot wounds, and half a dozen members of the mob have bullets in their bodies. The circus reached Dover before daylight Saturday morning. Entertainments were given in the afternoon and evening. The matinee performance passed off quietly, and the tent was crowded. During the entertainments in the evening half a dozen young roughs led by a drunken man named T. R. Halsey attempted to force themselves into the exhibition tent. The doorkeepers at once yelled the circus-man's rallying cry: "Hey Rube!" A score of canvassmen armed with tent-pegs, axes, and clubs responded to the slogan. The brief but vigorous skirmish that ensued ended in the expulsion of the intruders, who were roughly handled.

After the audience dispersed a howling mob remained about the tenting-ground, stoning canvasmen and jeering at those who endeavored to quiet them. John O'Brien, the owner of the show was hooted when he attempted to make the rioters listen to him. Most of the show was packed up by 12 o'clock, and the first train of wagons was moving toward the depot when a driver named Richert was struck on the head with a boulder. He fell senseless to the ground, and the train stopped. While Richert was being lifted into a wagon a shower of stones fell about the showmen, and several of the men received painful injuries. Although O'Brien cautioned his employes to keep cool and avoid battle, they did not obey him, and at half a dozen points they made sorties and strewed the ground with the bodies of their tormentors. When the wagon-train reached Delaware street a man stepped from behind a tree-box, and, taking deliberate aim at Henderson, who was on horseback, fired five revolver shots at him. The first bullet went through Henderson's hat, the second struck one of the fingers of his bridle-hand, and the third entered his breast. Henderson drew his revolver, fired one shot, and fell off his horse. These revolver shots had not died away before a double-barreled shot-gun was discharged into the posse of showmen. This was the signal for general firing. The wagons were stopped and used as a barricade by the showmen, who returned the fire of the town people. Not more than a dozen of the circus people, however, had revolvers, and the unarmed ones took shelter in and under wagons. When the pistol and shot-gun practice became general the crowd fell back fell back half a block. The police took no part in the battle, and did nothing to stop it. More than two hundred shot were fired, and the doors and windows of a dozen houses in the neighborhood show bullet marks to-day. The firing continued ten or fifteen minutes, and then the wagons moved slowly to the depot. While the show was being put upon the cars a few shots were exchanged. At 3 o'clock in the morning the show started for Cambridge, Md. O'Brien took the affair very coolly, and says he will bring suit against the town for damages.

FOUR HUNDRED THOUSAND.

A Georgia Claim Against the United States and How It Has Been Prosecuted.

ATLANTA, Ga., April 23.—James A. Green, who previous to the war between the States was appointed agent of Georgia to collect what is known as the Trezevant claim, amounting to nearly $400,000, and who is still after the money, has returned to Atlanta to get additional evidence that the money should be paid. Upon a dozen previous occasions points have been raised as an excuse for not paying in the money. All the objections were met successfully. The agent a few days since went to Washington feeling satisfied that he would at last be successful. When he reached there he found another stumbling block. This time E. M. Keigley, third auditor of the treasury, unearthed from the continental records the fact that Georgia was charged with $474,407, money advanced to said state by Joseph Clay, deputy postmaster-general in 1777. Auditor Keigley told Green that unless he could bring evidence to show that this had been paid Georgia would have to whistle. The Trezevant claimant, upon reaching here, hunted the archives of the state, and was successful in finding a letter from Alexander Hamilton, secretary of the treasury, dated November 1793, showing that the board of commissioners, after balancing up accounts between the United States and individual states, found that there was still to the credit of Georgia $19,988. As Treasurer Hamilton's letter was written sixteen years after Deputy Postmaster-General Clay made his entry on the ledger, it will appear that the debt must have been wiped out in some way. Green will go on again in a day or two and make a renewed effort. He thinks that he will be successful this time, as he can see no reason now why the money should not be forthcoming.

HOW THOUGHTLESS!

When I was only twenty-two,
And Ada seventeen,
I thought her temper, entre nous,
The sweetest ever seen.
'Tis grief to find a turtle-dove
Grow up a tiger-cat;
But in my days of early love
I never thought of that.

Our young affection grew apace;
Our future seemed so fair!
I thought she played with such a grace,
And sang with such an air.
'Tis rarely now that Ada sings,
And mostly rather flat;
She plays but half a dozen things—
I never thought of that.

'Twas not alone her lovely looks
That bound my heart in thrall;
My Ada read so many books,
And understood them all.
But now she might as well be blind—
As blind as any bat;
She won't improve her backward mind—
I never thought of that.

Her cheeks were like the damask rose,
Their tint from Nature came;
Though Art, as every Cockney knows,
Can emulate the same.
And lately on my Ada's face
They both play tit for tat;
It strikes me Art will win the race—
I never thought of that.

I deemed my pathway all serene,
With such a model wife;
No care could come to cloud the scene
Throughout our wedded life.
Though Cupid wrecked my love and me,
'Twere sin to blame the brat:
Poor little wretch, he can not see—
I never thought of that.

BUDELL'S PROPOSAL.

This time two years ago our Square Club was flourishing; now I am sole member. Budell, Marby, Smithers and myself had formed ourselves into a private bachelor's club for the purposes of whist and other intellectual occupations, and a very good time we contrived to have together. We hadn't many rules and by-laws for our club. We were sworn bachelors, and each of us had to allege a reason why he did not intend to wed; but we had so far recognized the possibility of a change in our sentiments as to solemnly bind ourselves to inform the club at once if we should ever meditate "halving our pleasures and doubling our expenses." Smithers said he hadn't time to marry; I was too poor; and Marby, who was regarded as our romantic member, gave us indefinitely to understand that "blighted affections" stood between him and the hymeneal altar. Budell at first laughed at the idea of assigning a reason; and he wished to allege as his that he hadn't met Mrs. Budell yet. That was unanimously rejected by the rest of the club; whereupon he insisted upon our accepting as an alternative that he was afraid of ladies. We were willing to stretch a point in favor of Budell, who was one of the jolliest possible fellows at a bachelor supper, and so we received this second reason. For the rest we nobly resolved not to fly, but to withstand temptation; our maxim was that every lady is charming so long as one is not married to her; and we were all ready to go into society, and even sustain the reputation of being "dancing men." We use to relate to each other over our celibate pipes wonderful stories of narrow escapes from guileful women every season; but if these were all as dependent upon the narrator's fancy for their important details as my contributions to the conversation, the escapes were somewhat more than hair's-breadth. Budell was especially a favorite in society; he was one of those rare phenomena, young barristers with some practice, and he had besides a very comfortable allowance from his father. Like the rest of the club, I had at first taken as a joke his assertion that he was afraid of ladies; but I gradually came to see that there was some truth in it. So long as Budell was in a large company—in a ball-room or any place like that—he was quite at his ease, and as bold as a lion; but if by any chance he happened to fall a temporary captive to a solitary damsel's bow and spear, he was almost overwhelmed with nervousness, and his usual powers of conversation completely deserted him. I once met him at the Royal Academy, escorting a very pretty young lady, and looking as uneasy as if he had had a worse conscience than King Herod; and I have seen him tremble at a mere passing mention of the conservatory by his partner at a dance. However, in the Square Club he was our most enthusiastic member; and horror and indignation filled our souls when we realized the direful fact that Budell was in love, and doing his best to be married.

Had we been women we might probably have seen the symptoms of the advancing malady; but we were only obtuse and short-sighted men. Now as I look back over those months I recall incidents that might have been warnings. The gradual decrease of Budell's hilarity at the club, and the gradual increase of his excursions into society, could hardly, indeed, have been portents, for Budell always did go more into society than the rest of us. The first allusion that he made to me about the lady who was afterwards to play Beatrice to his Benedick was at a concert—or rather in the cloak-room, after a concert. "That's what I call a pretty girl," he whispered to me; "there, that dark-eyed girl over there in the warm, fleecy, brown shawl—none of your flimsy white opera-cloaks." The girl was pretty, in a fresh and piquant sort of way; and even a sworn bachelor might have been excused for being pleased at receiving such a frank smile as she greeted Budell with. Again, not many days after, he remarked to me, a propos des bottes—"Met rather an interesting girl last night; quite agrees with me on the subject of names." I may be excused for neglecting this hint; Budell I think would have found a mollusc "interesting" if it had only agreed with him that there was nothing more objectionable than to have one's name murdered. He was nervously anxious that his name should be pronounced with the accent on the second syllable; and I afterwards found that he had been introduced (for the second time) to this "interesting girl" as "Boodle." "Just as though I rhymed to "noodle" as he indignantly expressed it. But the most important hint was given the night after Mrs. Burton's ball, at which we had all been present. We were lounging in Budell's rooms, and Smithers was giving us a highly colored and graphic illustration of the frivolity that passes for conversation between young men and maidens. "That's all nonsense," broke in Budell; "it's your own fault, at any rate. Why, last night I had quite a serious and interesting conversation about woman's education with a 'maiden.' I even quoted Scripture to her."

"Bet you a hat you misquoted," said the irreverent Smithers, who thought every one was as ignorant as himself.

"No; I'm not joking; it's a fact, and I got an idea or two, let me tell you."

Had he only told us that he had ventured into the conservatory in order to carry on his conversation without interruption, I am convinced that I at least should have surmised that the acquisition of an idea or two was not the only result. However I was not long in my state of ignorance. One day, a month or so after, Budell hunted me up to confide to me that the bachelors' club was all bosh; he was over head and ears in love, and did I think he ought to tell the other men? Then there followed a shower of apologetics, in which "soft brown eyes" and goodness knows what other personal attractions were prominent. When I recovered breath, I assured him that I thought it quite incumbent upon him to inform the club. I was rigid and cold with him, for I felt indignant; it was almost an insult to select me as his confidant, as though my celibate principles were less fixed than Marby's or Smithers'.

His announcement that evening was received in solemn silence by the Square Club; even Smithers had at first nothing to say. At last Marby asked: "Is it permitted to inquire the lady's name, and when the marriage is to take place?" Budell looked uncomfortable. "Well, the fact is," he said, "I thought I ought to tell the club at once; but I really haven't—that is, I don't quite know how to set about asking the lady."

Budell looked so comically distressed as he made this confession that the club hailed it with a shout of laughter. The notion of the bold and confident Budell finding himself muzzled by the tender passion was too suggestive for our risibility. Budell was seriously annoyed. "I don't think," he said, "that my courtesy to the club has been met with courtesy." He glared at me as if I specially had been guilty of revealing his confidence. We apologized humbly, and at last pacified him. He really was puzzled as to how to accomplish his proposal. Marby suggested the old-fashioned plan of plumping down on his knees, like a swain in a valentine; but Budell paled visibly. It was such a cold-blooded way, he objected; yet it appeared he had almost adopted it on two occasions. The first time a little brute of a brother had inopportunely appeared—"I never knew a nice girl that hadn't a little brute of a brother," exclaimed Budell, hastily generalizing; and on the second occasion he had even got to the length of informing the object of his affections (to adopt a phrase that used to madden Budell) that he had something to tell her, when her mother entered, and he had hastily to devise some idiotic fact about a flower-show. It was quite evident that his nerve was not equal to a third attempt. I suggested that he should write; but it seemed that the young lady, in talking about a certain novel, had laughed the hero to scorn for resorting to so cowardly a plan as writing his proposal.

"Can't you save her life in some thrilling manner, and then cast yourself at her feet?" asked the romantic Marby.

"Or can't you get overtaken in a shower, and then you could neatly ask her to share your lot as well as your umbrella?" suggested Smithers.

Budell smiled faintly. "It's all very well for you fellows to make fun of it when you haven't to do it yourselves; but all the same it's a ticklish thing to do well. I wish to do it in a neat and direct manner, without any humbug."

"It's my opinion," said Smithers, "that you'll end by 'popping the question' in some altogether extraordinary and absurd manner."

"Very well, sir," said Budell, with dignity, "we shall see."

But when we left him, the idea of the irrepressible Budell being tongue-tied before a dainty little damsel, who couldn't even sit on a jury, came up to us again with redoubled force, and we awoke the echoes of the silent street with renewed shouts of laughter.

Poor Budell could find no opportunity of settling his fate. He revolved drearily round my rooms, where he materially interfered with my work by constantly putting skillfully elaborated questions to me, devised to extract my opinion as to his lady-love, without revealing her name. I rose and fell in his estimation as my answers were what he desired or not; and I committed myself to an immense number of definite opinions as to the preference between blondes and brunettes, large mouths and small ears, etc., etc. "Whether do you prefer Greek or Saxon names for ladies?" he once asked me. I answered at random that I liked them both equally. "No, but really," he persisted. "I mean modern names derived from those languages." "Well," I replied at a venture, "I like Saxon names." "Do you?" he exclaimed; "why, so do I. For example, I don't think you could find a prettier name than Edith anywhere." "Oho!" I cried, "her name is Edith, is it?" Budell blushed, but couldn't deny it; and I dare say he would have revealed her surname also had I pressed him.

August brought me an invitation from Will Carlyon to spend a fortnight at his father's place in Scotland, and have a shot at the grouse. "I've asked Marby, Smithers and Budell," he wrote, "and I expect them all. I know you four have frightful chains-and-slavery notions about matrimony; but there are lots of nice girls staying here with Fanny, and if you don't all go home with the full intention of forthwith becoming Benedicts I shall be surprised. Anyhow, we have plenty of birds."

When I arrived I found the house full of pleasant men and agreeable girls; while the grouse gave very fair sport. The club was there in full force. Budell was in tolerable spirits, and came out in grand style as master of the ceremonies, and as the originator of all sorts of amusements. He was too busy to inflict any more confidences, but I had no reason to suppose that he had yet accomplished his proposal.

One afternoon a heavy rain-storm had driven the sportsmen in sooner than usual; I was examining my breech-loader in the gun-room when Smithers mysteriously requested me to come to the smoking-room at once. There I found Budell and Marby. Smithers had convened the club, and we had the room to ourselves. He briefly explained his object. "I have an announcement to make," he said, "similar to one made by Budell, not long since. I'm going to follow his example, and I hereby invite you all to the wedding. Like Budell, I haven't yet put the final question, but I am not afraid of the answer. I have no objection to tell you that the young lady is at present in this house, and that her name is Miss Maxwell."

"Good heavens!" ejaculated Budell.

"Well," said Marby, "I may as well take this opportunity of informing the club that I, too, am going to follow suit. Only I've taken the precaution to speak to the young lady first, and Fanny Carlyon is shortly going to become Mrs. Marby."

I was thunderstruck. "In that case," I said, with dignity, as I strode from the room, "I am now the only member of the Square Club."

Just as I was tying my necktie a few minutes before dinner, and reflecting that, though nervousness, want of leisure and even blighted affections might be got over, I at least had a reason that would preserve me from matrimony, Budell hurried into my room.

"Look here," he said, "I'm in the deuce of a box! Smithers is going to propose to Miss Maxwell; and hang it, that's Edith!"

"What! you're both in love with Miss Maxwell?"

"Yes, and that forward beast, Smithers, will be sure to propose right off; and I've never had a good opportunity."

"My dear Budell, you must make your opportunity. Do it to-night."

"To-night? Why, it's dinner-time already! and after dinner we're to have these blessed tableaux vivants; and goodness knows what Smithers will do while I'm looking after the wretched affairs. And then to-morrow, I've promised Carlyon to start for the east moor at nine o'clock."

I endeavored to comfort him by suggesting that possibly Miss Maxwell might refuse Smithers; but Budell shuddered at the possibility of being forestalled. He was palpably upset, and he looked nervous and anxious all dinner-time. The company generally attributed it to theatrical responsibility, but they were wrong; Budell was too old a hand to be anxious about anything so simple as tableaux vivants. Smithers, on the other hand, had secured a seat beside Miss Maxwell, and seemed to be making himself vastly agreeable.

The tableaux began immediately after dinner, and they were a great success. Budell had skilfully arranged them, without attempting to make them into a series; and music, supposed to be appropriate or to have some reference to each tableau, was played while the curtain was up. Curiously enough, in the second last tableau, Miss Maxwell, Smithers and Budell were to appear by themselves; and still more curiously the subject of it was "The Rivals." Where Budell had got it I don't know; probably in his inner consciousness. It was supposed to be a woodland scene in the paint-and-powder days. A young lady was discovered seated on a bank, with a lover kneeling at her feet, and holding one of her hands. At a little distance, and unseen by either of the lovers, was a rival glaring from among the trees at the unsuspecting pair. The tableau was very effective. Miss Maxwell looked very charming in her costume, and Smithers glared splendidly. Budell's face it was impossible to see, for his back was turned to the audience. Up till now the performers had all managed to remain as rigid as statues; but in this tableau Miss Maxwell, who had already appeared several times, seemed to lose her nerve. The curtain had not been up a minute when she started, looked down at Budell, and at last, flushing crimson, fairly ran off the stage. However, the last tableau went off without a hitch, and the slight mistake did not affect the general verdict. An adjournment was made to have a dance in the hall, and I was standing idly looking on when Budell, once more in his usual garb, rushed up to me in a fever of excitement.

"By George, sir," he whispered, "congratulate me! I've done it: it's all right."

And he dragged me along with him from the hall into the empty library.

"What on earth do you mean, man?" I exclaimed. "What have you done?"

"I've proposed, sir; and I've been accepted."

I cordially congratulated him; and then I inquired: "How did you manage it—when did you find the time—and where the courage?"

"I'll tell you. I did it in that tableau. Under cover of the music I told Edith that in all sober earnestness I was at her feet, not in jest alone; and I asked her to be my wife. That's why she ran away."

"No wonder!" I interjected.

"Wasn't it splendid doing it under Smither's very eyes? And then, of course, I saw Edith afterwards in the little drawing-room; and she'll be here directly, whenever she has changed her costume."

"Well, I'm glad you've settled it; and I think Smithers was right when he said you would end by proposing in some extraordinary way. And it seems to me that it was decidedly embarrassing for Miss Maxwell."

Smithers married Edith Maxwell's sister eighteen months after the tableau. —Belgravia.

The Vampire Delusion.

Some international superstitions have a symbolic significance. The vampire-fable, for instance, typifies the insufficiency of human life, the sleep-disturbing consciousness of its unattained purposes. Like the visits of the White Lady, the rambles of the posthumous night-walker have generally a definite object, the gratification of revenge or desire, or of some special crotchet, like that of the Turkish horse-ghoul (mentioned by the traveler Kohl), who amused himself by galloping the race-horses of his former master. Mental aberrations can become epidemic, and the vampire-delusion seems to be as contagious as the witchcraft-insanity. In Transylvania the "climate of opinion" appears to affect even foreigners. In 1859 an Austrian notary of Klausenburg recorded the testimony of forty-eight deponents of various nationalities, who attested the post-mortem appearance of one Fedor Radotzek, a brevet Captain of the Grenz-Corps, or Military-Frontier Guards. About two years after the funeral of the brevet Captain, the neighbors attended a birthday-party at the house of his widow, and toward evening some of them were standing in the open porch, talking to one of his sons, when they saw the old man himself come round the corner and enter the garden-gate. A few minutes after the garden was crowded with a mass-meeting of citizens, in a pardonable state of excitement, for the twilight was still clear enough to remove all doubts about the identity of the visitor. He had taken a seat on the garden-bench, making himself at home, as if nothing had happened; but, on being taken to task for the eccentricity of his conduct, he had the good sense to re-die on the spot, and met his fate like a well-behaved corpse, when a couple of priests took him in charge and hustled him off the premises.

Vampirism prevails all over Russia, Persia, Greece, Bohemia and Poland, but especially in the Danubian Principalities, where the wealthy families of the last century often buried their dead in sheet-iron lined coffins of the heaviest oak plank, while the poor would sometimes fetter or even ham-string their deceased relatives, to prevent them from abusing their feet for posthumous excursions. It is one of the few dogmas which the Moslem share with their Christian neighbors.—Dr. Felix L. Oswald, in Popular Science Monthly.

SUDDEN DEATH.

Mr. F. W. Grey, an Employe of the Shoe Factory. Falls Dead at the Pember House.

There were many in this city who were saddened on Saturday evening, on hearing of the sudden death of Mr. Forrest W. Grey, which occurred at the Pember house at half past eight o'clock, of heart disease. Mr. Grey came to this city from Beloit on the last day of December, and on the 2d of January he entered the employ of the Wisconsin shoe company as one of the cutters. He was not of robust health, at times was compelled to lay off for half a day, and at others for a whole day, complaining of kidney troubles. He was at work Friday, and on that evening he attended the Grand Army entertainment in Lappin's hall, and the dance of the employees of the shoe company at the Rifles armory, at which place he remained until midnight, but did not participate in the dancing. He did not go to work on Saturday, feeling unwell, he remained at his hotel most of the day. In the evening, while in the sitting room in conversation with parties, he suddenly dropped his head backwards, as if fainting. His friends immediately took hold of him, and Dr. Palmer was called. It was too late; the grim monster death had laid claim on his life, and in a few moments the breath of life had departed from him.

Although a resident of Janesville but a short time, the deceased had made many acquaintances. He was a member of Wisconsin Lodge No 14, I. O. O. F., which society he joined about two months since by card, issued by Fourth of July Lodge, of Philadelphia, of which he was a past grand. He was also a member of the Masonic order, of Oak Park, Illinois. The remains were taken charge of by Messrs. W. S. Webber, D. E. Puffer, W. H. Burgess, of the shoe company, and C. T. Winslow, members of the above orders, by whom they were laid out and prepared for burial. We understand he leaves a wife residing in Perry, Ohio; a father in New York city; two brothers in Philadelphia; and an uncle, Mr. Griswold, of Roscoe, Illinois, who were notified by telegraph of the sad occurrence.

The following dispatch was received this morning from his brother in Philadelphia:

PHILADELPHIA, April 23d.
Pember House, Janesville:
Have telegraphed Forrest's wife, at Perry, Ohio. Retain the body subject to her orders, or further orders from me.
A. M. GREY.

The remains were taken in charge by the officers of Wisconsin lodge No. 14, who hold them subject to the above orders.

Death of an Old Resident.

Mr. Jeremiah D. Day, died at his residence on Bluff street in the second ward at 7 o'clock last evening, at the age of seventy-seven years and seven months. The deceased had been an invalid for over twenty years. He was attacked with the small pox in 1857, the severe effects of which deprived him of his speech, and it was with great difficulty that he could make his wants known to any but his immediate family. Since that time he has struggled through several severe attacks of sickness, and some weeks ago he was again attacked with pneumonia and paralysis, which ended his life last evening. He settled in Janesville in 1844. The deceased was a mason by trade, many of the first brick buildings in this city being the work of his hands. Owing to his bodily infirmities, he has not been able to do much if any hard labor for the past twenty years. He enjoyed the acquaintance of a large circle of friends, who will always remember him as one of the first builders of our city.

Besides his widow, he leaves seven children to mourn his death. Mrs. Mary Griffith, of Fulton, Rock county; Mrs. Caroline Forest, of Minnesota; John Day, of Grant county; Mrs. Nancy Collins, of Minnesota; Mrs. Sarah J. Higby, of Sterling, Ill.; and Mrs. Maria Fellows, of this city; two children having preceded him through the dark valley. The funeral will take place at the late residence of the deceased to-morrow afternoon at two o'clock, the Rev. O. A. Curtis, of Court Street church, officiating.

The Funeral of Mrs. Spaulding.

The funeral service of the late Mrs. Lydia S. Spaulding, took place this afternoon at her home on South Jackson street. The house was crowded with intimate friends who went thither to pay their last respects to one whom they knew so well and deeply honored in life. The Rev. Mr. Davies, pastor of the Congregational church, read the service and made a few fitting and touching remarks. The pall bearers were W. G. Wheelock, J. C. Echlin, Dr. Q. O. Sutherland, B. F. Crossett, Frank Gray, and A. H. Sheldon. The remains were taken to Oak Hill cemetery for interment.

BOLD ROBBERY.

Andrew Jennings Robbed of $395 in an Alley in the Rear of the Club by Tom Dorsey and Tim Broderick.

On Saturday night, Mr. Andrew Jennings, formerly of Sharon, but now of this city, fell into bad company when he took Tom Dorsey and Tim Broderick for his companions in a saloon. Jennings is an elderly man, somewhat infirm, in fact he walks with a crutch and cane, and on Saturday evening he fell into the hands of the above well known characters, in in the Club saloon, on West Milwaukee street, where Jennings showed them his pocket-book, which he says contained $395. After showing the pocket-book, Dorsey took it and placed it in Jennings' boot leg, inside the stocking, for safety against theives. Soon eleven o'clock arrived and the proprietor of the club was compelled to close up for the night and requested those present to leave. By some means best known to themselves, Dorsey, Broderick, Jennings and two others, young men well known, but who are entirely free from the case, went out the back door into an alley, when Jennings was pushed to the ground by Dorsey and Broderick and Dorsey took the pocket book from the boot, and both started away on a run. Jennings gave the alarm, and Officer Ed. Smith and Marshal Hogan were on the ground in a few minutes, and Broderick was captured near the saloon, by Officer Smith, while the marshal arrested a man who claimed to have seen the robbery. These two were taken to jail, and the search was made for Dorsey. Marshal Hogan succeeded in capturing him at his home yesterday morning at five o'clock. The money was not secured.

Dorsey is a hard citizen, and Marshal Hogan feels proud that he has at last captured him, and hopes that he will soon be, where he belongs, within the walls of the prison at Waupun, where he is well acquainted, having recently been released therefrom.

The Circuit Court.

The circuit court for Rock county convened this morning at 10 o'clock at the court house, His Honor, John R. Bennett, presiding. The forenoon was occupied in calling the calendar, hearing ex parte motions and excusing jurymen. This afternoon, Judge A. Scott Sloan, of Beaver Dam, arrived, and will preside during the trial of the cases of which Judge Bennett has been counsel. Twelve jurymen were excused by the court, upon showing sufficient cause,—two, Messrs. Doolittle and Hobart, having left the state,—which reduces the jury fourteen, to be made good by an extra venire. The first jury case will be called to-morrow morning—Wilcox vs. Hogan.
